

Commission for Gender Equality

Public Education and Information of the Commission for Gender Equality.

The month of July, we observe moral regeneration as a powerful reminder of our shared responsibility to build a society anchored in ethical values, compassion, and justice. This annual reflection challenges us to confront the moral decay that fosters inequality and division and calls us to actively restore the principles that uplift and unify us. Moral regeneration is deeply intertwined with the pursuit of gender equality and gender justice, as it calls for a collective awakening to values that honour dignity, fairness, and inclusivity for all. By restoring the moral fabric of society, we challenge deeply entrenched norms that perpetuate discrimination, gender inequality and instead embrace a vision where individuals, regardless of gender are treated with respect and afforded equal opportunities. Promoting ethical behaviour means acknowledging the systemic barriers women and gender-diverse people face, and actively working to dismantle them through education, policy reform, and cultural transformation. At the forefront of this effort is the Commission for Gender Equality (CGE), whose vital role is to promote, protect, and monitor gender rights in South Africa. Through advocacy, research, and public engagement, the CGE drives accountability, helping to shape a society where gender equality is not just a goal but a lived reality. At its core, moral regeneration demands a shift in consciousness, one that celebrates diversity, empowers voices that have been marginalised, and fosters a society rooted in compassion, responsibility, and equity.
